Our Response to Miracles

Bryan Garlock

"Simon, 'Put out into the deep and let down your nets for a catch.' And Simon answered, 'Master, we toiled all night and took nothing! But at your word I will let down the nets.' And when they had done this, they enclosed a large number of fish, and their nets were breaking. They signaled to their partners in the other boat to come and help them. And they came and filled both the boats, so that they began to sink. But when Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, 'Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord.' For he and all who were with him were astonished at the catch of fish that they had taken...." (Lk 5.4-9)

Peter had been fishing all night with no luck. However, when Jesus told him to let down his nets, he caught enough to fill two boats with fish. This miracle had a soul-convicting effect on those present that day: they were astonished, "an overwhelming feeling of stunning wonder." (Lexham Research Lexicon)

God sent the Holy Spirit to convict our hearts. (Jn 16.8; 20.30-31) Therefore, these miracles should have the same effect on us.

But do they? Do we read these miracles as abstract events? The New Testament writers recorded these miracles so that the readers would feel overwhelmed with wonder, not feel disconnected from them. If you do not have an awe-filled response, examine your heart; perhaps your faith is weak.

Besides being amazed by the miracle, we learn that Peter recognized his sins and confessed his wickedness. Does this miracle humble you as you reflect on Jesus' power? Does it cause you to acknowledge your sins? If not, examine your heart. Perhaps we do not have genuine godly sorrow for our wrongdoing. BG

Every Person's Personal Participation

Dee Bowman

The Bible is perennial. It never has to be renewed and revised since it is pertinent to any age and applicable to any culture. It says the same thing to a nation with a Socialist government as to a free Democratic society. In fact, the Bible is so fixed by God that it will tolerate no change and condemns any effort to alter it in any way (II John 9-11).

The Bible is primarily for persons. Everything in it is intended to speak to an individual's relationship to God—how he can respect Him as God, how he can please Him—and man's relationship to man—how he can respect Him, how he can be of service to him. It has a very personal message (Matthew 22:37). The faith it causes is personal—between a man and God. Its various requirements call for personal decisions—those that come because a man has been stricken by some moral obligation. The promises it affords are intimate, based on a person's confidence that God will do what He has said. Nobody can obey the law of God for someone else. There is no such thing as some kind of substitutionary obedience. True obedience comes only when the person under obligation decides in his own mind to react to what is required of him. In short, the Bible is a private communication between a man and his God.

However, the Bible also contains instructions for how those persons are to act in groups. It tells them, for instance, how each person is to function in society, what his obligations are to government, and especially how he is to act in association with others in what is described as “the church,” other saved people (Acts 2:38). It should be carefully observed, however, that even when it addresses things having to do with behavior in a congregation, it begins with instructions to the individual regarding his own attitudes and conduct. Even then, his attitudes and actions are directed toward God and the persons that comprise the group, and not to some nebulous “corporation” of some sort.

For instance: when a person observes the Lord's Supper he is to do so only after having examined himself (I Corinthians 11:28). When a person gives of his means, he is to do so having purposed in his own heart. And when a man sings, he should make melody in his own heart (I Corinthians 14:15). Collective worship is acceptable to God only as the individuals who offer it are acceptable to God. Solomon says, “keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God.” He says “thy foot,” not their's (Ecclesiastes 5:1) It's every person's job to be ready to worship. Neither is service measured in corporate terms. Each person's service is his own. True, it may have an effect on others, it may even be a part of what they do, but it is, in the final reality, his own service (Gal. 6:4).

Far too many folks think that because a certain congregation has a “good name,” or is known to be active and functional, they are part of it. But to really be a part, you have to do your part.

And that means more than just giving into a common treasury. If you are able, you need to participate. That means doing something, getting involved, partaking.

It seems to me that three things are necessary for personal participation:

Decide how you can help. Every person has his own talent (Matthew 25). Before you can manage yours, you must be aware of what it is. You know what you can do. Think about how you can use that to help with the plan being considered. Or if the occasion calls for it, do it by yourself. Many an opportunity has been lost because someone had to call someone to help get it done. Consider the good Samaritan (Luke 10). He just did what he could—and with no help. And remember, every talent is important or God would not have given it.

Make up your mind to do it. Nobody can make up your mind. Actually, as Jesus said, (Matthew 16:24), you must “take up your own cross.” Other people may have an influence but, in the final reality, your choice is yours and nobody else's. Your cross is yours and nobody else's. Consider others, certainly, but be independent. Choose for yourself.

Run the risk. Sure, you may get embarrassed. You may even have to hurt a little—maybe even a lot. But do it anyhow. Yes, there may be some who can do it better than you, but does that absolve you of your responsibility or remove your obligation? More than that, don't let diffidence rob you of the personal satisfaction of having done what you could.

Remember, for the Christian, forgiveness, service, pain, and satisfaction are all personal. Be prepared to share them—personally. After all is said and done, it's all up to you.
